

Step aside, Pac-Man and Donkey Kong, and make way for "Custer's Revenge," the newest electronic game sensation.

More than just another video game, "Custer's Revenge" also happens to be the latest in X-rated video entertainment.

There are no invading aliens to vaporize. The object of the game, plain and simple, is to mate General Custer, clad only in boots and hat, with a naked Indian maiden.

The more times the unlikely couple join without being struck by an arrow, the more points the player scores.

We don't know whether the general public is quite ready for "Custer's Revenge." But if it is, it's going to be tougher than ever to keep the teenagers in class—and out of the video arcades.
